

Wills for young adults: reassessing the 'I haven't got much' misconception

This month's newsletter is centred on the millennial generation and those planning for later life.

Leah Woodlee, a Chartered Legal Executive in our Wills, Trusts, and Probate team, provides you with articles tailored where you can learn more about securing your legacy, the misconceptions about leaving behind 'not much,' and the importance of planning ahead.

by Leah Woodlee

The importance of planning ahead: why a text or social media message isn't enough to make a will

Sending a text or social media message is not enough to make a will. Why is it essential to plan ahead and have those critical conversations?

Protect Your Legacy and Plan Ahead

Blended families and inheritance: making sure your wishes are honoured

Often, clients in blended families avoid putting in place a will as they do not know how to prioritise their loved ones to ensure that both their new partner and children are provided for.

Protect Your Inheritance in Blended Families

As a grandparent, how do you write a will when you gain a stepfamily?

As a parent and grandparent, you do what you can to support your family daily, no matter what shape it takes, but you may have questions about how to do the same when you are no longer around.

Protect Your Stepfamily's Financial Future

Complete our 10 Step questionnaire

🕒 Quick & Online

In case you missed it →

- How Education, Health and Care Plans are funded
- Birkett Long supports Resolution Awareness Week 2023
- Unpaid livery fees: How to take the reins
- Autumn Statement 2023 - what it means for you