

BLong

NOVEMBER 2021

Pets and divorce: should you make a PetNup?

I think it would be fair to say that for many people, pets find a special place in their owners' affections and their families. They are often treated more like children which is why, if a relationship breaks down, what happens to the family pets? It may be just as important and as emotive an issue to be addressed as the arrangements for the children and finances.

A PetNup is a formal agreement that is entered into by a couple whilst they are together that sets out what should happen to their pets in the event of divorce or separation.

Read more in Karen's latest article explaining your options.

by Karen Johnson

The bank of mum and dad: The tax implications

by Leah Woodnott

Good news for those left out of will!

by Amanda Smallcombe

Our free employee redundancy kit

by Julie Temple

In case you missed it

- Omicron variant - new measures by the department for education
- The impact of contested court proceedings on children
- Equality Act: Menopause Disability Discrimination
- No fault divorce - when should I speak to a solicitor
- Solicitor qualifying into wills, trusts and probate team

For some free advice

just register